Capita announce details of their 1st Self-Directed Support Scotland Conference

Capita's National Self-Directed Support Scotland Conference is timed to address the key issues involved in the implementation of SDS

With the Self-Directed Support Bill due to be launched by the Scottish Parliament this year, it is clear that implementing this approach to delivering care is a priority across Scotland.

Capita's National Self-Directed Support Scotland Conference, taking place in Edinburgh on the 29th March 2012, brings together the key policy makers setting this agenda, along with the organisations and individuals that are empowering people to direct their own care. As the personalisation agenda shifts the emphasis of support from the service to the service-user, an adaptable and responsive approach is required to deal with changes to funding, organisational structure and service delivery. Our expert speakers, including two Self-Directed Support Pilot Councils, will give you up to date feedback on the challenges and approaches that have arisen so far.

This conference is timed to address the key issues involved in the implementation of Self-Directed Support including:

Effective working across partner agencies including integrating health, housing and social care provision
 How to establish and embed an outcomes-focused approach
 Utilising the expertise of the third sector in the provision of social care

Take this opportunity to address the important challenges faced in delivering Self-Directed Support and enhance your own strategy and delivery of this crucial national agenda.
