Loosing a Child due to Parental Kidnapping

Parental Kidnapping expert, Maureen Dabbagh, author of "Parental Kidnapping in America: An Historical & Cultural Analysis" discusses family abduction on Divorce Source Radio.

In the latest episode of Divorce Source Radio with Steve Peck, Parental Kidnapping is our topic and our guest is Maureen Dabbagh, a Virginia Supreme Court Family Mediator specializing in cross-border child custody disputes.

Maureen has experienced Parental Kidnapping firsthand. Her three-year-old daughter was abducted from the United States and taken to the Middle East by her Syrian ex-husband. Maureen and her daughter had no communication for 17 years.

The reality of family abduction is that it is a form of child endangerment. Children abducted by family members are often forced into the nomadic, unstable lifestyle of a fugitive: They are taught to hide their real identities under a false name and to avoid and distrust law enforcement and authority figures.

Maureen is the author of "Parental Kidnapping in America: An Historical & Cultural Analysis." Through her books, practice, and public appearances, she hopes to educate those experiencing or fearing a family abduction.
